Updates

- Half a millennium ago, renaissance artist-engineers like Leonardo da Vinci and Benvenuto Cellini were masters of several professions and fields simultaneously. In the last 100 years professions have splintered into hundreds of disciplines and sub-disciplines. Consequently no one can master more than a tiny fragment of knowledge today. Paradoxically the convergence of sciences and technology once again call for a renaissance; one that embodies a holistic view of technology based on transformation, collaboration and interdisciplinary for a unified understanding of the physical world from the nano-scale to the planetary scale. CAPE is re-positioning itself in response to this call for transformation.

New Directions

- Under the pilot IEHP-Navigator Project for Selected Health Professions funded by the Ministry of Training, colleges and Universities, CAPE is extending its offerings to other professions by replicating and adapting its talent integration process for engineers to the needs of selected health professions.
- CAPE is aiming at universal digital HR by expanding to include all other related professions into its membership.
- 360Mentorship Model - under its employer outreach and engagement initiatives CAPE will be offering a Mentoring event for internationally trained engineers and health professionals. This will offer a unique opportunity for the newcomers in these professions to engage and build their professional networks in a series of mentoring sessions with prospective employers. This is also an exceptional opportunity for leading employers to meet with a highly educated, experienced and qualified pool of talent.
